My dear Bonhardt,

I went yesterday to Covington's work. I must say that I do not see very much to criticize. Unless you have evidence to the contrary I would say that the hole to the north at least is ancient.

But I am writing to Covington and asking him to call. When he does I will tell him that I hear on various hands that he is digging for dealers, and will ask him if that is so (of course not naming you). I can then stir him up considerably.

I do not want to talk to him about this tomb in particular. I should only raise the price against you.

Yours always of course the place would be better covered in. I will probably speak about that.
